Leonardo Bonanni is founder of Sourcemap, the supply chain mapping company and is a visiting scholar at the MIT media Lab. He will speak on very large big data displays (VLBDD) by the designers Reed Kram and Clemens Weisshaar. Both designers will be in attendance. Mr. Weisshaar will speak to his process of mapping and scaling data arrays for large spatial displays. Mr. Kram will demonstrate the use of Google's Ngram tool and the projection of three types of terapixel-resolution technologies–each of them printing a minimum height of 28 feet. This lecture is supported by PixelFLEX and the Massachusetts High Technology Council.
